About the Speakers

Chris Harrison is Publishing Development Director for the global humanities and social science book publishing programme at Cambridge University Press where he has worked since 1999, first as economics editor before becoming manager of the social science publishing. The Cambridge social science publishing programme covers economics, management, political science, sociology, psychology, modern history, linguistics and law. The Cambridge humanities publishing programme covers literature, theatre and music, philosophy, classical studies, religious studies and archaeology. As economics editor Chris has worked with many leading economists from North America, Europe and Asia.

Chris studied History at Cambridge University and then gained a PhD in African History from University of London's School of Oriental & African Studies. His publications include: France and Islam in West Africa, 1860–1960 (1988) which was published in CUP's African Studies series and "Politics, Peer Review and Pluralism" published in the journal Environmental Science & Policy (2004) and was based on a presentation to the American Association for Advancement of Science on politics and scientific controversies.

Joe Ng acquires content for learning and research across the Social Sciences, primarily in law, economics, business and management. He welcome proposals for academic publications (scholarly works, handbooks, graduate textbooks) that have a strong focus on Asia, either comparatively or at the country/regional level. Proposals for the Cambridge Studies in Comparative Public Policy series can be sent to him while those for the Cambridge Elements in Public Policy can be sent to PublicPolicyElements@cambridge.org. He has worked in publishing since 2004 and is a Masters graduate (Information Studies) of Nanyang Technological University and has a civil engineering degree from the National University of Singapore. He is based in Singapore with responsibility for authors based in East Asia and ASEAN.
